Test 15
Read the following passage and answer the questions given below.
Thilak insisted that he should do the cooking for a change. He had always liked to cook and never failed to remind his wife of the grand parties he had had before they married. Thilak would ask, how he had managed to feed as many as twenty people. Dilini however had other ideas. She remembered Thilak's parties but never liked them. But Thilak was so insistent, that in the end Dilini reluctantly agreed to let him have a free hand.
Dilini determined to make use of the situation to relax, went to the garden to read. She had no sooner settled down, when Thilak began calling to her from the kitchen. She had half expected this would happen, so she smiled to herself, and continued to read. Thilak shouted louder than ever and seeing that there was no response, finally came to the garden, obviously in a troubled state. How could he possibly work with no equipment, he demanded. He could not find bowls, cups, dishes, or even a single spoon. Dilini calmly told him where everything was and Thilak rushed back only to find that milk had boiled over. He mopped the mess up hastily and set to work. In no time, nearly everything that had been in the sideboard and in the pantry was

About two hours passed and Dilini could not understand why things were so quiet. She thought Thilak must be managing after all. The smell of something burning quickly proved her wrong and she threw her book and dashed to the kitchen. Thick smoke greeted her when she opened the door. She could dimly make out the figure of Thilak trying to extract something from the oven and burning himself in the process. Thilak produced a blackened object, quickly dropped it into the sink and turned on the tap. His cake was a little overdone, he explained, but otherwise all right. Apart from this, he had put sugar into the dhal curry instead of salt, but he did not think it would do the curry any harm. When the smoke cleared, Dilini was horrified. Her
