Question : 06

Read the following text and answer the questions given below it.

Tiya had to leave for home before it got dark, because mother was waiting for him to bring a pot of drinking water from the well at the foot of Pidurangala. The water in this well was so clean and sweet unlike the water found in the wells of their village and in most other villages which was brackish. It had been a habit started by his brother when he worked at Sihigiri before Trya took over from him. In the morning he would bring the empty pot and leave it under a tree near the well and on the way back in the evening he would have his bath at the well just below the temple building, fill the pot with water from the well and carry it home, to get her with his share of anything he had received as payment for his services as a tour guide that day. His grandma Bohodevi had explained to him that the water is so pure probably because of the kumbuk tree growing beside the well and he knew that his grandma was right.

Tiya walked along the footpath leading to the village. He had to be very alert, for this is the time the elephants would be coming out. He could hear one of them close by, breaking a branch off a tree, and there could be others around.

As he came in sight of the village, which was on a small hillock overlooking their paddy fields, Tiya could hear children playing, and see the smoke curling up towards the sky from a few houses, as the women cooked the evening meal. He wondered what mother had prepared that day, as he was feeling hungry after the bath. Mother wanted him to take his father's meal to him at the quarry, as he was working through the night, and Tiya got mother to wrap his meal too at the same time, so he could have his dinner with his father and then watch him at work.

Tiya had to hurry and walk fast, to reach the work place before it got very dark. Long before he reached the place he could hear the regular rhythmic beat of iron on stone, as the craftsmen chipped the stone was like clay, but it was much more difficult and painstaking, as the craftsmen had no room for any mistakes. Tiya went close to his father and stood by his side in silence for he did not want to distract him from what he was doing.
