Going through the Old Photos

Me, my dad and my brother
we were looking through the old photos.
Pictures of my dad with a broken leg and my mum with big flappy shorts on and me on a tricycle
when we got to one of my mum
with a baby on her knee,
and I go,
“Is that me or Brian?” and my dad says,
“Let’s have a look.
It isn’t you or Brian,” he says.
“It’s Alan. He died.
He would have been two years younger than Brian and two years older than you.
He was a lovely baby.”
“How did he die?”
“Whooping cough.
I was away at the time.
He coughed himself to death in Connie’s arms.

11. Read the following passage and answer the questions given below (10 marks)

When you are invited to a meal in Thailand, the words of the invitation literally mean 'come and eat rice'. Indeed, nearly all Thai dishes are eaten with rice, which grows there very easily as the climate is warm and there is plenty of rain.

The food is always served in neatly cut up pieces, so there is no need to use knives and forks but, instead, special spoons and forks are used. The Thais used to eat with their hands and there are still some people who eat this way. There is a particular way of doing it. First, they wash their right hand in a bowl of water, they only eat with their right hand. They are careful not to let the food touch the palm of their hand. After the meal, the hand is again carefully washed.

The meal is usually made up of several different dishes, all of which are spicy. They are served in bowls which everyone shares, though each person has their own bowl of rice. As Thailand has a long coastline, it not surprising that fish and shellfish play an important part in Thai cooking.

Underline the correct answer
